Brief description of the company

IKEA was originally formed as a result of the political and economic upheaval that changed the face of Eastern Europe forever and began with the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989.

With these developments, IKEA could not be sure it would be able to continue getting its important share of furniture from the affected region. To safeguard itself against the loss of vital suppliers, IKEA formed Swedwood as a subsidiary on April 1, 1991 and then IKEA Industry as a subsidiary on December 1, 2013. The initial task of the new company was to participate, when necessary, in the privatisation of IKEA suppliers.

Today IKEA Industry has evolved into an IKEA supplier with advanced production facilities of its own, mainly in Eastern Europe. The road from 1991 to the present day is marked primarily by the building, acquisition and running of various plants in the region. An ongoing challenge for IKEA Industry is to reduce costs, increase efficiency and gather production know-how to benefit IKEA's customers.
